PLACE FOR A RAILROAD.

THE United States geological survey is making much ado over the absence of transportation facilities in Alaska, when other and better fields lie right at their doors waiting for recognition. Here in Nye county, Nevada, there is an area that has been crying out for capital to bring it into production, and had it not been for the death of Marcus Bernheimer, something would have been done in that quarter. The estimated cost of furnishing transportation facilities to connect Railroad valley with Tonopah would not equal the cost of installing construction machinery on the proposed line in Alaska, and the benefits would be incomparably greater. Recently the United States consular service devoted a good deal of space to informing the public that a French company in Zanzibar had entered into a contract for the construction of 350 miles of railroad for the sole purpose of tapping soda deposits of that far-off land. Nye county has the largest deposit of soda that lies outdoors in the universe and one that could be placed on the cars at a fraction of the lowest estimated cost of the foreign article. But there is no railroad, and the men who have invested their money in that quarter feel they have to develop potash to bring capital from the outside.

Recently, when Mr. Hicks, of the United States geological survey, was in the valley, he noticed small crystals in the surface soil along the ditch which proved to be gaylussite. Upon further investigation there proves to be a deposit of gaylussite averaging 18 inches in thickness over a part of the mud flat which is shown, by numerous tests made by the company's chemist, to run from 20 to 35 per cent gaylussite, probably averaging 25 per cent, of which nearly 9 per cent is soda in carbonate form. About two inches of the surface is a barren crust. This can be winnowed to one side with a road-making machine, a placer machine, or an endless chain of buckets. Then gaylussite can be scooped up, dumped into cars and conveyed to a central point for treatment, which consists only in dissolving the gaylussite in hot water for ten minutes, when the water is drawn off and evaporated, leaving only the soda of commerce. This is worth $27 a ton in San Francisco. With a railroad and cheap transportation to the coast there is from $6 to $8 a ton profit to be made. This means a working profit of $30,000 to $45,000 from each 30-acre claim.

The development of these surface deposits and the known deep-laying bodies would control the soda market of the world. The Railroad Valley company has expended a large amount of money in pioneer work—more than the United States government and all others combined—and is well deserving of success.

Those who have the pleasure of knowing the inside history of the Railroad Valley company admire the energy and pluck of the men who continue to sink their money in the ground with the prospect of benefiting the entire country. It is true that they are not working on a hopeless proposition, as the property is one of the most valuable in the state since the operations of the company disclosed the presence of an enormous artesian flow, but the existence of soda ash should stimulate interest on the part of investors to take up the survey prepared by the Bernheimer syndicate and push a railroad through to completion. This would help Willow Creek, where nearly a hundred men are regularly employed at the silver and gold camps, which seem to have long years of prosperity ahead. A railroad would enable both camps to increase the number of men and to hasten development work, and also cause smaller holders to do something with their claims, which they are precluded from doing so long as the present high cost of transportation continues.

Other cities managed to have sane celebrations of Halloween, but Tonopah was in the discard. Reno, Carson City, Goldfield, Fallon and Winnemucca succeeded in protecting property and in arresting those who could not take warning. But, oh, you Tonopah!

It goes hard for the San Francisco papers to say a good word about Tonopah. Last Friday afternoon the West End Consolidated Mining company held a meeting of directors at the headquarters of the company in Oakland and declared its maiden dividend of 5 cents a share, providing for a disbursement approximating $100,000, yet there was not a word about the fact in the Saturday morning Chronicle or Examiner while both papers devoted space to the weakness of the day before in the stock market. The Bonanza was the only paper that gave the news.

James T. Green, of the Carson City Appeal, has surrendered the lease of that paper, after demonstrating to the satisfaction of the citizens of the capital that a really good newspaper could be printed when a competent man takes the management. Mr. Green is one of the best known publishers in Nevada and his retirement from the field at Carson is due more to political expediency than any desire to better the paper. Mr. Green has the best wishes of the fraternity and his return to the work will be awaited with keen interest.

The Butters Patent Vacuum Filter company of New York is sending out marked copies of Financial America, with a request that Nevada papers reprint an article dealing with patent litigation. Nothing doing. The Butters company is like a lot of other eastern concerns that want something for nothing. They can find the advertising rates of the Bonanza on application.

The play-back feature of the slot machine law is causing some confusion, as there are no two towns where it is interpreted the same way. It does not require bingles for a man to play back or stand at a machine all day if the house is willing. It is an easy-to-beat proposition.

We smell only gas. The odor of perfume is its essence turning to gas.

The convex or bulging top of an aroma-tight can of Schilling's Best coffee—preserved in its aroma—shows the pressure of coffee gas. Notice that fragrant puff when you puncture the tin. There's just a trifle; 99.9 per cent or more is forced to remain as essence and you get it in the cup.
